My daughter played in a recital and there was an open mic set-up. The pianist's father walked up to her and told her she had terrible posture. He said, "Put your shoulders back, lady." She was taken aback and had a very slight smile on her face. She was quiet and didn't argue with him. She entered the room for her next piece and the mother of one of her classmates said to her, "What do you think of that?" My daughter didn't hear the question, but my husband did. He turned to her and said, "You know what, dear, I don't think he's right." Our daughter looked at him and he continued. "You're five. You shouldn't be feeling sorry for yourself because your piano teacher says your posture's wrong." That's when she heard the question. "Mama, what do you think of that?" She looked at him and said, "I think he's right." My husband said, "I don't want to start a fight, so I'm going to agree with him," and then he smiled at her. She said, "Then what am I going to do?" He said, "You're not going to do anything. You're going to figure out a way to play that piece whether he says anything or not." So she went on to play the piece perfectly and her teacher didn't say anything the rest of the hour. It's easy for me to say because I can't do it. I used to play piano for the church. The congregation would gather for worship and then I would be called upon to play a piano solo. I never wanted to do it. I just wanted the people to come together and sing and dance and be happy. As I became more confident and practiced my solo, I found myself wanting to do the same thing. I wanted to create worship. 82157476af
